

Lunati® Re-signs As Official Crankshaft of NASCAR Whelen All-American Series and Annual Crew Chief Award

Lunati, "The Racer's Company" for internal engine components, has backed up our company slogan by re-signing as the official crankshaft of NASCAR's popular Whelen All-American Series for 2009. The Whelen Series has become the pre-eminent racing series for late model racecars and a frequently used racer entry point for many aspiring drivers. The selection of Lunati as the official crankshaft further cements Lunati's involvement with NASCAR, which began in 2002, and the company's dedication to this growing racing series and it's racers.

In addition to the Official Crankshaft connection, Lunati will continue sponsoring the annual Whelen All-American Series Crew Chief Award with a $3000 top prize. This year's award went to Chad McCoy who helped guide the Philip Morris racing team to the national title in only his second year as crew chief for this very successful team.

"We are excited about the upcoming race season and our continued involvement with NASCAR and its various race series. Working one-on-one with racers is what we live for. We share the same passion for winning as they do and the fact that they are running our parts pushes us harder to supply them with the most advanced components available. We wish the best for all racers and crews in the upcoming year". – Matt Sadler, Lunati Media Coordinator.
